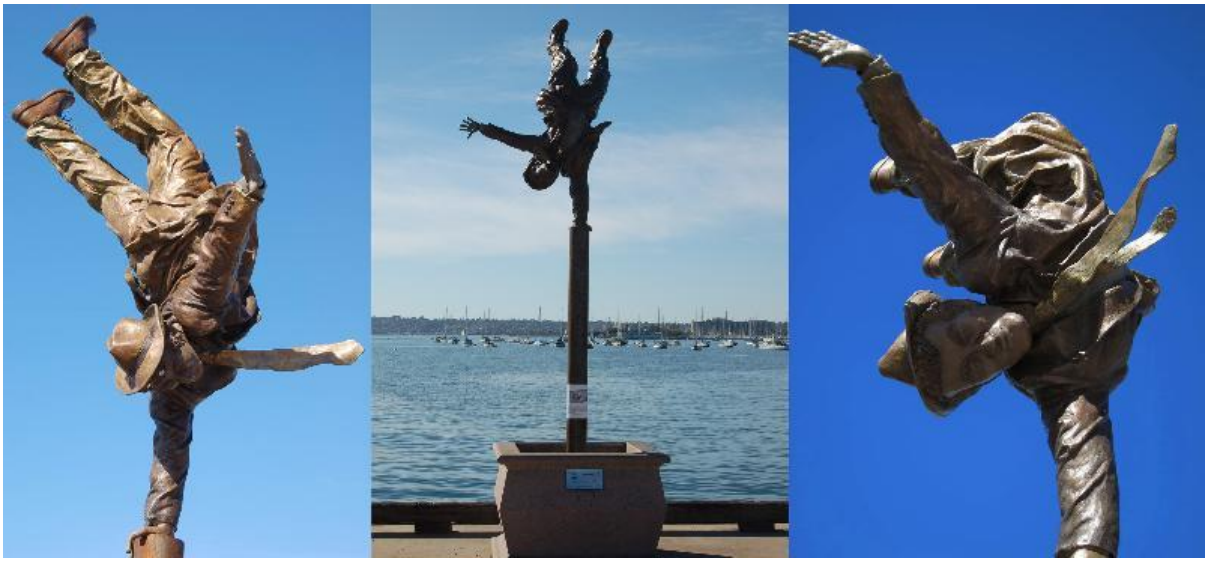
Handstand

by

Daniel Stern



Stern's passion for sculpting spans his entire life. With nearly a decade of work behind him and countless hours experimenting and perfecting technique, Stern's sculptures reflect his life experiences as a public servant, film maker, director, writer, actor and father.

About his process of creating his sculptures, Stern says, "I am a story-teller at heart and my sculptural work allows me to give a literal and visceral dimension to my characters. Much like taking a still frame from a film or extracting a page from a memoir, the work communicates freeing, fleeting, or reflexive moments of my characters' varied narratives. The decisive energy of their tales is represented by their gesture and movement."

In addition to his visual art career, Stern is well known for his acting roles in Breaking Away, Home Alone, and City Slickers, among others, and for directing television, movies, and Off Broadway plays.

Passionate about public service, Stern is the Founder and President for the Malibu Foundation for Youth and Families. In 2010, President Obama awarded Stern and his wife, Laure, the prestigious "Call to Service Award" for their notable volunteer work. Stern is a board member of the Creative Coalition and serves as Honorary Chairman of the California PTA. He also teaches Media Literacy at various schools and conventions nationwide.
